1. Evacuation Chair Training

There is no 'average person'. People have different levels of abilities and disabilities. The Central Statistics Office carried out the National Disability Survey in 2006. This survey indicates that about 18.5% of the population have some kind of long-lasting disability. The legal obligation on employers to evacuate safely applies to all persons on the premises regardless of ability, in particular the Employment Equality Act (1998/2004), the Equal Status Act (2000/2004), the Disability Act (2005) and the Safety, Health and Welfare at Work Act (2005).

Duration This course is 2 hours long with a maximum of 12 participants. A prerequisite for this course is a current certificate in manual handling. Manual handling can be offered, at an additional cost.	Fees Available upon request
Objectives Unless a passenger lift is designated as an evacuation lift, people (employees/visitors) being evacuated do not use lifts. Evacuation chairs are designed to allow people with disabilities, particularly those with mobility difficulties, to be helped to move down and, in some case, upstairs during an evacuation. This course offers the wherewithal for fire wardens, for example, to evacuate safely people with disabilities
